About OECD/G20 BEPS (Base Erosion and Profit Shifting)

Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (BEPS) is a global problem which requires global solutions. BEPS refers to tax planning strategies that exploit gaps and mismatches in tax rules to artificially shift profits to low or no-tax locations where there is little or no economic activity, resulting in little or no overall corporate tax being paid. BEPS is of major significance for developing countries due to their heavy reliance on corporate income tax, particularly from multinational enterprises (MNEs).

In an increasingly interconnected world, national tax laws have not always kept pace with global corporations, fluid movement of capital, and the rise of the digital economy, leaving gaps that can be exploited to generate double non-taxation. This undermines the fairness and integrity of tax systems. The final reports and the toolkits have been developed in the context of the OECD/G20 BEPS Project to equip governments with the domestic and international instruments needed to address this challenge. They will give countries the tools to ensure that profits are taxed where economic activities generating the profits are performed and where value is created, while at the same time give business greater certainty by reducing disputes over the application of international tax rules, and standardising requirements.

As the BEPS project has entered an implementation phase, the OECD has launched the Inclusive Framework, a platform where all the tax jurisdictions can be involved in the process of setting the global agenda on an equal footing. Under the inclusive framework, over 120 countries and jurisdictions are collaborating to implement the BEPS measures and tackle BEPS.
